Wikinvest to Provide Stock Charts to Forbes.com

Thursday January 15, 2009, 12:23 pm EST

SAN FRANCISCO, CA--(MARKET WIRE)--Jan 15, 2009 -- Wikinvest.com (www.wikinvest.com) today announced a content and technology licensing agreement with Forbes.com in which Wikinvest content and charts will be available throughout the Forbes.com website.

The interactive stock charts allow readers to pan and zoom through time, view relevant Forbes.com stories in the context of share price movements, and add annotations to describe why a price fluctuation occurred when it did. They will appear on Forbes.com within articles as well as on stock tearsheets for U.S. and most major international exchange listed companies. The charts are also available for web users to embed on blogs and social media pages around the web.

"Stock charts and investing go hand in hand, and Wikinvest has created some of the best stock charts out there," said Forbes.com President and CEO James Spanfeller. "We're thrilled to be working with them to provide our readers with such a useful tool to help them stay on top of their portfolios."

The relationship is a natural fit for both parties. Forbes has long been at the forefront of financial analysis and, with more than 20 MM unique visitors each month, will increase the reach of Wikinvest's content and technology.

"It's exciting to be working with one of the most established companies in business and finance," said Wikinvest Co-CEO Michael Sha. "We created Wikinvest with the hopes of helping people around the world make sense of their money, and this relationship helps us take a big step towards that mission."

About Wikinvest

Launched in 2007, Wikinvest is reinventing the traditional finance portal by going beyond the standard data and news about companies to explain the meaning and relevance of that information. Wikinvest uses innovative technology and a vibrant community of active investors to provide insights about business, finance, and investing. The site's in-depth research covers thousands of business and finance topics, from companies, industries, commodities, and currencies to hot issues such as investing in emerging markets, renewable energy technologies, and the 2008 financial crisis.
